Norlender Knitwear: Kind wool for kind people

Norlender Knitwear's story begins in 1927 when our founder Ola Tveiten bought his first knitting machine. Ola Tveiten lived with his family on a mountain farm on the island Osterøy. There was no road connection to the farm, so the big knitting machine was brought up on a horse-drawn sleigh with assistance from helpful neighbours. Ola Tveiten was a carpenter, and as soon as the machine was installed in the basement of the farmhouse, he had to leave for work in Bergen. "You just have to make it work", he told his teenage sons and left. Along with their mother Anna Maria Tveiten, they made the machine work and started producing underwear for women under the name 'Svale'. The business went well and they soon had to invest in a second knitting machine and several industrial sewing machines. Eventually, the factory outgrew the farmhouse basement and the family built the first factory building next to the old farmhouse. WWII and the occupation of Norway were dark years with very limited resources. Knitting yarn was hard to obtain, and what was available was a strange mix of cotton and other replacement fibers. Everything that was produced had to be carefully distributed evenly between customers. The war ended, and Europe and Norway eventually got back to normal. Business was good, people needed clothes and the prospects were bright. In the winter of 1989, the third generation of the Tveiten family reinvested in new machinery. Production soon commenced under the brand Norlender. Woollen cardigans and pullovers were now being made in the historical family factory.

OUR TRADITIONS

Wool is an important part of Norwegian heritage. The qualities of wool have long been recognized, and traces of woollen clothing in Norway can be seen as early as 4000 bc. In the last few centuries, wool has been used for knitting, weaving, and felting. It is the most common raw material in our national costumes, with advanced multicolor patterns were hand knitted and decked with beautiful woven bands and pewter clasps. You will find these elements in Norlender's knitwear patterns. All our designs are inspired by our traditions, history, and our spectacular nature, creating stylish garments for the modern man, woman, and child.

OUR WOOL

Norwegian woollen clothing/knitwear is internationally renowned for its high quality. Staying warm in the cold and often wet climate of the north, has been a key factor for survival, and wool is a natural fibre with great thermal properties. Norwegian wool has long, strong fibres, and is a product of the natural evolution of our hardy Norwegian sheep. We use Norwegian wool in over 70% of our knitwear range, while the remaining garments in finer gauges use European yarns. 100% Merino wool is used in a selection of styles for a soft and luxurious feel. At Norlender we always use high-quality yarns sourced from skilled spinners in Norway and Europe.

SUSTAINABILITY

At Norlender we feel privileged to work with a natural and sustainable fibre such as wool. Our spinners follow strict eco guidelines within their production and procurement chain. Norlender is always working to produce green and low-environmental impact knitwear.

The fisherman sweaters have been used along the coast of Scandinavia for centuries. The rough weather in these coastal areas has taught our people to utilize the natural thermal properties of wool.

At Norlender we still produce our fisherman range from the same unique Norwegian wool to create a hardwearing and nearly everlasting product.
